INTRODUCTION

THE YEAR 1942 marks the tenth anniversary of this series of exhibitions of contemporary American art. In recent years it has been our custom to give two separate exhibitions each season, one of paintings and the other of sculpture, watercolors, drawings and prints. For reasons of economy the present exhibition combines all the mediums and thus limits to a considerable extent the number of exhibits possible to show in each category.

The appearance of several artists from other parts of the country who have contributed to these exhibitions in the past has been postponed to a later date in order that their work may count more effectively in regional exhibitions which are to take place in this Museum.

In selecting the work for this exhibition it was heartening to find that the artists working under the shadow of war have used their talents to the utmost, apparently feeling a deeper sense of responsibility towards their part in sustaining our cultural life through this crisis, and almost without exception have succeeded in doing some of the finest work of their careers.

WINSLOW HOMER

By LLOYD GOODRICH

The definitive book on this great American artist, based on original sources and containing much new material, including many of the artist's letters never before published.

Volume I contains biography and criticism, Homer's letters, a reminiscence by his friend John W. Beatty, and 96 illustrations.

Volume II consists of a complete catalogue raisonné of Homer's work in all mediums, running to about 1,800 items. This volume is published in a limited edition.
